

FOODSERVICE SUPPLY CHAIN

Over the past few months BFFF have been working with a representative group of wholesalers, producers and logistics service providers to explore how the foodservice supply chain can become more efficient and effective. The views of all sectors were summarised and presented to a joint meeting. One would not expect all sectors to have the same opinions or indeed the many shapes and sizes of players in the market to have the same problems. However, all parties openly engaged in the debate. There were some common themes that came through especially aspects of product availability; communication of availability issues; identification of outer cases and the opportunity for better utilisation of today's technology. Over the next month or so we will build on the feedback received and launch appropriate initiatives.
